A JOLLY JOKE.

How the Anxious Louisvilleans Beheld Boyton.

Special to the Star.

LOUISVILLE, March 20.—Captain Paul Boyton will arrive opposite Louisville between 3 and 4 o'clock this afternoon. Crowds of people came down to the wharf as early as Sunday, and have been anticipating the Captain's arrival ever since yesterday.

Some practical joker concluded he would play a trick on the people who were on the lookout, so he obtained a large blanket and sewed it up so as to represent a man, took it above town some three miles and cast it into the water. Shortly it came within sight of the advance guard.

He gave the alarm, and immediately the people began to swarm about the wharf, boats, barges, rafts, and every place upon which they could obtain a foothold. The float came in view, and went out of sight over the falls without making a landing, passing the wharf some three hundred yards in the stream.

Many were the exclamations of surprise to think that Boyton should not stop at Louisville, until the return of some men who had followed the float in skiffs, who explained the myth. The boats which were recognized by Boyton's manager (Mr. H. S. Sargent) as official and will bear his colors are the Starkey and Shallerons. These steamers will leave the foot of Third street at 2 o'clock.
